An overview of the intersection of legal, technological and practical issues involved in discovery of electronically stored information in civil litigation and government inquiries. The course will focus on the key procedural rules, decisions and information-technology (IT) issues encompassed in this century's ever-growing arena of "eDiscovery" law and process. Topics will include not only an introduction to companies' proactive information-management policies but also these key aspects of the reactive eDiscovery process: information preservation obligations; scope of, and sources for, data collections; legally defensible search methodologies; production formats; and avoiding waiver of attorney-client privilege.

Dere 7993 Temas Especiales en Derecho Privado: Law, Cyberfeminism	2	712	LMWJV	9- 11:40 AM	Jane Bailey	L-1

Jane Bailey is an Associate Professor of Law at the University of Ottawa, where she teaches civil procedure, contracts and cyberfeminism. Professor Bailey completed her LL.M. at the University of Toronto in 2002, supported by a Centre for Innovation Law and Policy scholarship and an Ontario Scholarship. She was a co-recipient of the Howland Prize for outstanding performance in the LL.M. program. She served as a law clerk to the Honorable Mr. Justice John Sopinka at the Supreme Court of Canada. Professor Bailey's research focuses on the impact of evolving technology on significant public commitments to equality, privacy, freedom of expression and multiculturalism, as well as the societal and cultural impact of the Internet and emerging forms of private technological control, particularly in relation to members of socially disadvantaged communities. She has written and published on a variety of topics, including: internet hate propaganda, copyright and freedom of expression, online child pornography, women's e-quality, privacy, and webcamming

She is a co-investigator on a 7-year MCRI project entitled "Rethinking Processual Law: Towards Cyberjustice" and a co-principal investigator with Dr. Valerie Steeves of the Department of Criminology on "The eGirls Project", which is funded by a 3-year SSHRC Partnership Development Grant. Her current research is focused on online self-exposure by girls and young women (including sexting), online harassment and hate, privacy and equality concerns arising from surveillance, and access to justice.

Cyberfeminism involves evolving, dynamic and frequently contested theory and practice. What Faith Wilding describes as a repudiation of "old style (70's) feminism", argued by some to be "guilt-inducing, essentialist, anti-technology, anti-sex, and not relevant to women's circumstances in the new technologies",1 continues to evolve as newcomers lay claim to membership in the movement.

We will explore cyberfeminism as part of an historic continuum of feminist theory and praxis – one that holds promise for capturing the commitment and imagination of existing and future generations in this critical time of technological and scientific revolution. Feminist voices speaking from solid theoretical foundations built on cutting edge analysis that takes the benefit of existing feminist theory and experience must play a significant role in the policy-making arena if hard-won gains of the past are to be protected and new possibilities for connectivity and community capitalized upon.

EL CURSO SE DICTARÁ EN INGLÉS DEL 1 AL 12 DE JULIO.

Dere 7991 Temas Especiales en Derecho Privado: Negotiating and Drafting Distribution and Sales Representative Relationships.	1	411	LMWJV	6-8:20 PM	Jorge R. González Vizcarrondo	L-1

Professor Jorge R. Gonzalez graduated from Harvard College and Harvard Law School and was an attorney with the law firm of McConnell Valdés from 1969 until his retirement from the firm in 2011. For the last six years, Professor Gonzalez has given a winter seminar titled "The Effective Lawyer – Beyond Legal Expertise."

Utilizing distribution and sales representative relationships and the special Puerto Rico laws that govern them (Act 75 of June 24, 1964 and Act 20 of December 5, 1990), this highly participative, hands on seminar will discuss these two laws, the negotiation and drafting skills for establishing, amending and terminating these relationships, and how these skills are applicable in the general day-to-day practice of our legal profession. The course will utilize the so-called Socratic method instead of lectures, as well as daily hands on analysis of practical issues. The course will be given primarily in English since most of these relationships are with non-Puerto Rico entities who will insist in utilizing the English language that has become the principal language of commerce.
